Hunting in Spain

Hunting in Spain with our partner Toquero Hunting Services. Excellent game populations, hunting tradition and Spanish passion guarantee well organized and eventful hunts. Particularly thanks to the attractive and safe hunting of different Ibex subspecies, as well as due to the variety of combination possibilities, Spain enjoys an excellent reputation in the world wide hunting community – with ibex hunting as the absolute highlight!

Game species

The ibex is Spain's most important game species and of major interest to Spanish and foreign hunters alike. The Latin name for the Iberian ibex is „Capra Pyrenaica Hispanica“, generally known as „Macho Montes“.

There are four subspecies:

- Beceite Ibex
- Gredos Ibex
- Sierra Nevada Ibex
- Ronda Ibex

The characteristic, lyre-shaped and slightly twisted horns are especially appealing.

Hunting season

The best time for hunting is the rut, from November to mid-December. This is also the time when the coat condition is best for taxidermy.
In April, when the bucks gather again, hunting is also highly interesting.

BECEITE-IBEX

The Beceite ibex inhabits the mountains of Tortosa and Beceite (up to 1,393 m) southwest of Barcelona. The trophy has a wide spread; the horns are lyre-shaped and slightly curve backwards from the middle. The tips of the horns of mature males point upwards. Chances for silver and gold medal trophies are high. Males develop antlers average 70 – 80 cm length.

The region has upland character and is vegetated by dense forests and understory which is relatively uncommon for Spain.

GREDOS-IBEX

The Gredos ibex is the most popular of Spanish ibexes. This subspecies is endemic to the Sierra de Gredos (up to 2,592 m), ca. 200 km west of Madrid. The trophy is also lyre-shaped, the antlers have a greater curvature from the middle backwards than those of the Beceite, the tips point upwards. The horns do not grow as long as those of the Beceite, but the base is very strong. Antlers reach a length of 70 to 80cm on average.

The hunting grounds are located on the south side of Sierra de Gredos in breathtaking landscapes. The mountains are covered by bushes, oak trees and wild walnut trees.

SIERRA NEVADA-IBEX

The Sierra Nevada Ibex lives southeast of Grenada in the Sierra Nevada in Andalusia. The horns of this subspecies resemble those of the Beceite or Gredos Ibex, but are shorter and significantly weaker at the base.

The hunting ground is located in the midst of the Sierra Nevada. From the top of each mountain magnificent views across the sea can be enjoyed – sometimes even as far as North Africa!

The game reserve is rocky and only partially covered by dense bushes. Antlers reach a length of 55 to 65cm on average, superior ones also 65 to 70cm.

RONDA-IBEX

The Ronda Ibex inhabits the Ronda Mountains, west of Málaga (Andalusia). The antlers of this subspecies point backwards, in a typical V-shape and resemble rather those of the Alpine Ibex. Thus, the Ronda Ibex clearly differs from the other Spanish species.

On average, antlers reach a length of 50 to 55cm, superior ones also 65 to 70cm or in exceptional cases even 80 cm. The hunting ground is situated in the Sierra Blanca, north of Marbella. The Ronda Mountains are very similar to the Sierra Nevada.
