HUNTING IN ENGLAND

In England, there are traditionally two hunting seasons, firstly from the beginning of April to the first week of June and secondly the rutting season from mid-July to mid-August. In April, the Bucks are still grey and hunting that early is not to everybody's taste. Many hunters prefer rutting season, which however also presents challenges to the hunter. In any case, England is ideal for the experienced Roe Deer hunter, who wants to fill his trophy wall with strong Roebucks.

Quality is emphasized over quantity and the focus is on sportive hunting (that is stalking). If desired, raised hide hunting is also possible, but diminishes chances of course. However, stalking mostly involves much more standing than walking.

Due to the mild climate – winters have little snow – the low game density with nutrient-rich grazing on chalky soil, lead to the ideal habitat for world-class Roebucks to grow up here.

Hunting magazines repeatedly report on the culling of Roebucks with legendary antler weights. Certainly one has to search for Roebucks above 500 g also in these areas, but the pro rata rate on total game bag is very high. In some years, especially when solar radiation was high during antler development, the success rate was almost 9 %. Nevertheless, one should not necessarily commit oneself to such royal trophies.

Examining the antler weights of previous years, the average weight is 350 g. That is nothing to sneeze at! In general, a weekly bag of 3 to 4 Roebucks per hunter can be expected.
