Climate:	The climate in Helsinki, as in other parts of Finland, is considered cold temperate. The country is at a transition between the continental and maritime climates. The weather is therefore largely determined by the westerly wind zone and its low pressure areas, which often leads to a rather humid climate and changeable weather. Between November and March it is extremely cold in Helsinki, even the average temperatures are often below freezing point. The summers are also rather moderate, even by German standards. In July and August you can expect maximum temperatures of around 21 to 22 degrees Celsius. Finland's weather is characterized by many rainy days throughout the year. In winter these make up about two thirds of the month, while during spring and summer they occur on about 15 to 16 days a month. There are enough hours of sunshine during the height of summer - between May and August you can expect up to 6 to 8 hours per day.
Health:	Vaccinations Please inform yourself about the vaccination regulations of the respective country. You can obtain this information from the responsible tropical institute. If vaccinations are required, we would like to point out that you yourself are responsible for complying with them.
